

KINGDOM ECONOMICS

PANEL DISCUSSION

My wife and I live paycheck-to-paycheck on one income. We've always tried to live within our means, but we're barely getting by. We aren't able to save for emergencies and we know that's not wise. Is it foolish to consider moving into an apartment to reduce our costs? Our son and daughter have only known life in a house with a backyard and pets.

My husband and I have made some poor decisions and have a number of debts. They can feel overwhelming, though, and we're not great with finances. Where do we even start?

The debt we own on our house is overwhelming. It feels like the one hurdle that keeps us from the stewardship we long for. Is it wrong to allow your house to go back to the bank?

You talked in your sermon about "good debt," and mentioned education and owning a home. But what if I have a low interest rate on student loans locked in, and could make more money by making monthly payments on those loans and keeping the other money I have in an account that pays a higher interest rate?

*What's the best way to buy a car?
Take out a loan to get a new car with a warranty? Buy an older car that I may have to pay for repairs on? What about leasing?*

I'm in a small group that's been together for awhile, and we want to take additional steps to live our lives in a more connected way. Can you offer us some ideas?

The following slides are formatted without backgrounds for printing

My wife and I live paycheck-to-paycheck on one income. We've always tried to live within our means, but we're barely getting by. We aren't able to save for emergencies and we know that's not wise. Is it foolish to consider moving into an apartment to reduce our costs? Our son and daughter have only known life in a house with a backyard and pets.

My husband and I have made some poor decisions and have a number of debts. They can feel overwhelming, though, and we're not great with finances. Where do we even start?

The debt we own on our house is overwhelming. It feels like the one hurdle that keeps us from the stewardship we long for. Is it wrong to allow your house to go back to the bank?

You talked in your sermon about "good debt," and mentioned education and owning a home. But what if I have a low interest rate on student loans locked in, and could make more money by making monthly payments on those loans and keeping the other money I have in an account that pays a higher interest rate?

What's the best way to buy a car?
Take out a loan to get a new car with a warranty? Buy an older car that I may have to pay for repairs on? What about leasing?

I'm in a small group that's been together for awhile, and we want to take additional steps to live our lives in a more connected way. Can you offer us some ideas?